Ernst & Young and the International School of Luxembourg (ISL) celebrate 10 Years of Collaboration

Luxembourg, 06 May 2010 – Ernst & Young and the International School of Luxembourg (ISL) celebrated their 10th anniversary of collaboration at a ceremony hosted by ISL and attended by the school's administration and Board of Governors as well as several associates of the well-known consulting firm. Certificates of appreciation for Ernst & Young's numerous years of support of the school were presented.

Since 2000, Ernst & Young has played a key role in supporting the school's technology infrastructure by partially financing the leasing of computers, allowing students to access, on a daily basis, the latest generation of computer hardware and software.

Above and beyond this collaboration, several initiatives are in the works and should be finalized in the coming weeks: visits to the school by professionals from the firm who will talk about their career paths and professional experiences as well as summer jobs and internships for high school students. Ernst & Young's commitment goes well beyond financial support, demonstrating a genuine willingness to support student learning and to create positive change within the community.

"Ernst & Young and ISL are still working together after 10 years because of certain fundamentals in which both institutions believe: people, knowledge, and infrastructure," added Alain Kinsch, Country Managing Partner of Ernst & Young Luxembourg.

“We are very keen to see this partnership continue to develop and grow in the years ahead, which we know it will do,” declared ISL Director Chris Bowman.

“We all know that the ISL plays a fundamental role in making a place available for international students coming from all over the world. Luxembourg is a very international community and without this school, we in business would not be able to attract clients from abroad to come to work in Luxembourg,” concluded Alain Kinsch.
